FRAMEWORK

The oceans are a part of the surface of the planet occupied by sea water that surrounds the continents and currently covers about 71% of the Earth, 361 million km2.
Pacific, Atlantic, Indian, Antarctic and Arctic are their names.
They give life and allow life with the 70% of oxygen they release into the atmosphere through the plankton that is in the sea.
Once again, Man is destroying a good that is yours and precious ...

«We must save the oceans if we want to save mankind» Jacques Cousteau

“We need a wave of change and a material revolution,” asks Parley Oceans.

These words sum up the great problem that plagues society.
Excess consumption and consequent production of waste, namely plastics.
The awareness of society and of the new generations is essential to change mentalities and attitudes.
Many measures have been taken to minimize these impacts, but certainly many more will have to be taken.
The recycling of plastic is already a reality, but not enough.
The planet is our most precious possession and our home.
Water is our energy, our driving force.
